MEMORANDUM

DATE: 26 May 1994
FROM: John Meredith
TO: DSP Colleagues
SUBJECT: Grantmaking data for the states, 1983-1993

Attached are some summaries that I thought might be of interest as we continue to take stock of where the program has been and where it might be headed. Herewith you will find statistical profiles for each state council from 1983 to 1993. Also included are the amounts awarded to each state in a fiscal year, not counting exemplary awards. I will also be passing out graphs to you individually for the states you work with.

I hope these are instructive, but I caution you to be judicious in your interpretations. In some cases the computer information seems to be simply wrong (some states are shown at times as giving away more than they received in their annual appropriation, and at other times they show up as giving almost nothing away). In other cases, the data are missing. I am also suspicious of the figures for 1993; they show a rather precipitous drop in amounts awarded through regrants, but I have no way of knowing whether information might still be coming in from some of them. For example, we do not yet have anything that has been turned in from Iowa.

I hope to keep working on this until we are more comfortable with the reliability of the figures, but I thought this might be a way to get at least a rough idea of any trends we might see in the program. As better versions become available, I will share them. Bon appetit!

NOTES ON NATIONWIDE STATISTICS

Assuming that the information contained in our computer is correct, the data reveal some interesting trends.

The total amount that the states award through regrants, when taken as a percentage of the funds they receive from DSP (excluding Exemplary Award dollars) has been declining steadily over the past nine years. In 1983 regrants constituted 89% of the total funds received, but by 1991 they had dropped to 51% of the total.

There has been an obvious and marked rise in the number of smaller grants (mini and packaged) since 1983 at the expense of major grants. When comparing 1991 to 1985, one finds over 6 times as many mini grants, 10 times as many packaged programs, but less than half as many major grants. Furthermore, although the median dollar award for a major grant has increased by a factor of at least three, the total amount spent on major grants declined by about 20%.

In terms of numbers of applications, smaller grants have been burgeoning, but they still occupy a relatively small portion of total dollars spent. In 1991, mini grants represented 32% of applications received, but only 13% of funds expended. Packaged applications accounted for 41% of applications received, but only 6% of funds expended. Taken together, small grants comprise about 74% of the applications funded, but only about 20% of the dollars awarded.

Although smaller grants are relatively inexpensive on the surface, the number of actual applications requires more staff time to administer. My guess is that the overall decline in the amounts awarded over the past nine years reflects more pressure on administrative budgets for this purpose, as well as an increasing tendency for councils to craft their own projects.

Major grants are perennially the most likely place for treasury funds to be used. In this category, treasury funds constitute a fairly steady 17-18% of the total. (For DSP, the treasury funds are about 21% of our total disbursed.) For mini grants treasury funds constitute less than 1% of the total, and for packaged programs they are essentially nil.
