LEGISLATIVE HISTORY OF THE NATIONAL FOUNDATION ON THE ARTS AND HUMANITIES. 89TH CONGRESS-92ND CONGRESS

September 15, 1971

Highlights of Proposals and Activities Expanding Federal Interest in the Arts and Humanities prior to the establishment of the National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities.

1953--The Commission of Fine Arts, at the request of President Truman, issued a report on "Art and Government" recommending the use of federal funds to purchase American art for the National Collection of Fine Art (a part of the Smithsonian) and to assist public high schools in acquiring equipment for teaching the arts.

1955--President Eisenhower proposed that Congress establish a Federal Advisory Commission on the Arts under HEW, but no such legislation was enacted during the Eisenhower Administration.

1958--Congress passed a bill to construct a National Cultural Center in the District of Columbia. The bill donated federal land, but construction funds were to be raised from private contributions. In 1963 the law was amended to authorize matching federal contributions for construction of the center, renamed for President Kennedy.

1961--President Kennedy backed legislation to establish a Federal Council on the Arts. It was rejected by a 166-173 roll call vote in the House.

1961--Secretary of Labor Goldberg, after arbitrating a N.Y. Metropolitan Opera Assn. labor dispute, issued a report Dec. 14 on "The State of the Performing Arts," in which he urged aid to the performing arts "as a new community responsibility." He supported the proposal for a Federal Advisory Council on the Arts and recommended tax concessions, federal scholarships, and housing and custodial aid by local and state governments for opera and symphony companies.

March 1962--President Kennedy appointed August Heckscher as Special Consultant on the Arts. Heckscher May 28, 1963, issued a report. "The Arts and the National Government," recommending establishment of a National Arts Foundation "on the model of the existing foundations in science and health" to provide the focus for federal efforts to stimulate the arts.

1963--Mr. Kennedy issued an Executive Order creating the President's Advisory Council on the Arts. (However, the Council was never activated.) In the same year, the Senate passed a Kennedy Bill (S2379) establishing a National Council on Arts and a National Arts Foundation to make matching federal grants to the states and non-profit professional groups to encourage and support the arts. S2379 authorized appropriations of $5 million for grants in the first year and $10 million each year thereafter.

1964--The Office of Education added a separate Cultural Affairs Branch to give increased attention to the arts and humanities.

1964--Congress passed the National Arts and Cultural Development Act establishing a National Council on the Arts in the Executive Office of the President. The Council's role was to be advisory, not to subsidize the arts.

1964--In a Sept. 18 speech at Brown University, President Johnson said, "I look forward with greatest favor on the proposal for a national foundation on the humanities."

The President's speech at Brown followed the issuance of a report by the National Commission on the Humanities. The Commission was established jointly in 1963 by the American Council of Learned Societies, the United Chapters of Phi Beta Kappa and the Council of Graduate Schools in the United States. In its 1964 report, it called for the establishment of a National Humanities Foundation to support study, teaching and research in the arts and humanities through federal grants and fellowships and through assistance in construction and expansion of libraries, classrooms, etc.. The report said that the United States faced a "crises of national leadership" because the development of the humanities lagged far behind science and technology.
