The National Endowment for the Humanities

In order "to promote progress and scholarship in the humanities and the arts in the United States," Congress enacted the National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities Act of 1965. This act established the National Endowment for the Humanities as an independent grant-making agency of the federal government to support research, education, and public programs in the humanities. In fiscal year 1998, grants were made through Federal-State Partnership, three divisions (Preservation and Access, Public Programs, Research and Education), and two offices (Challenge Grants and Enterprise).

The act that established the National Endowment for the Humanities says, "The term 'humanities' includes, but is not limited to, the study of the following: language, both modern and classical; linguistics; literature; history; jurisprudence; philosophy; archaeology; comparative religion; ethics; the history, criticism, and theory of the arts; those aspects of social sciences which have humanistic content and employ humanistic methods; and the study and application of the humanities to the human environment with particular attention to reflecting our diverse heritage, traditions, and history and to the relevance of the humanities to the current conditions of national life."

What the Endowment Supports. The National Endowment for the Humanities supports exemplary work to advance and disseminate knowledge in all the disciplines of the humanities. Endowment support is intended to complement and assist private and local efforts and to serve as a catalyst to increase nonfederal support for projects of high quality. To date, NEH matching grants have helped generate almost $1.578 billion in gift funds.

Each application to the Endowment is assessed by knowledgeable persons outside the agency who are asked for their judgments about the quality and significance of the proposed project. About 650 scholars, professionals in the humanities, and other experts serve on approximately 125 panels throughout the course of a year.

In fiscal year 1998, 3,634 applications were reviewed, of which 696 were approved.

The Jefferson Lecture

On March 23, 1998, Pulitzer Prize-winning historian Bernard Bailyn delivered the twenty-seventh Jefferson Lecture in the Humanities at the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C. The lecture, entitled "To Begin the World Anew," addressed the sources of the creative imagination that led to the founding of the American Republic two centuries ago. Bailyn, who observed that the founders of the American nation were one of the most creative groups in modern history, spoke of the real isolation of American life and culture in the eighteenth century. He observed that the very provincialism of even the most sophisticated eighteenth-century Americans fostered new ways of thinking about the ethical and political organization of power and government.

Bailyn presented a view of the "pastoral republic," a place later imagined by such painters as Thomas Cole: an idyllic scene in the sea of corruption populated by flawed but virtuous and honest citizens who earnestly sought to make a better arrangement for governing. It was an America that was considerably different from the urbane European world from which it came, and equally so from the industrial nation that it would become.

The key to understanding the accomplishment of the founders is the idea of promise. "They were warned of the folly of defying the received traditions, the sheer unlikelihood that they, obscure people on the outer borderlands of European civilization, knew better than the established authorities...that they could create something freer, ultimately more enduring than what was then known in the centers of metropolitan life," said Bailyn. Yet they clung to the idea of promise, the promise to create a new and better arrangement for mankind, better than anything that went before for more people. The pursuit of happiness was a radical notion in the eighteenth century.

And they succeeded, against all odds and against all the best received opinion of the day. The founders' success was due, in large part, argued Bailyn, to the fact that they were provincials: "alive to the values of a greater world, but not, they knew, of it-comfortable in a lesser world but aware of its limitations." They perceived that their very remoteness from the metropolitan world gave them a moral advantage in politics. And believing that freedom depends, to some degree, on the virtue of rulers and the ruled alike, America-"in the provincial simplicity of its manners, its lack of luxury and pomp, its artlessness, homeliness, lack of affectation and cynicism"-had taken Britain's place as the "guardian and promoter of liberty." Their provincialism nourished their political imaginations; it gave them the ability to view the world with a cool, critical, and challenging eye. They refused to be intimidated and were confident of their integrity and creative capacities. They "demanded to know why things must be the way they are; and they had the imagination, energy, and moral stature to conceive of something closer to the grain of everyday reality and more likely to lead to human happiness," added Bailyn.

Bailyn concluded the 1998 Jefferson Lecture by observing that though we do not have the need or the opportunity to begin the world anew, we do have the obligation, as the inheritors of the successes of the founders, to view every establishment critically, to remain in some sense on the margins, and to continue to ask why things must be the way they are.

For forty-five years Bailyn taught history to Harvard students, fascinating them with the heady experience of learning history that is never a science, always a craft, and sometimes an art. His style is to demand that the student puzzle things out for himself. His classes are predictably brilliant in their wide-ranging and free-flowing landscapes where interpretive historical vistas are sketched rapidly with exhilarating intellectual connections.

Twice the recipient of the Pulitzer Prize in history, Bailyn's 1968 book, Ideological Origins of the American Revolution, transformed the writing of American history and challenged long-standing interpretations about the causes of the American Revolution. Other historians, in opposition to the economic interpretations of the Revolution and the drive for independence, had made the point that the American revolutionaries in 1776 were men of deep principle. Bailyn went further and argued that because the colonists absorbed from English sources a hard-edged, suspicious view of politics and the world of power, they were predisposed to regard British initiatives as attempts to turn virtuous Americans into political slaves. Besides winning a Pulitzer, the book also won the George Bancroft Prize. Still another, The Ordeal of Thomas Hutchinson, won the National Book Award. Hutchinson, observed Bailyn, was an able administrator, adept at the intricacies of political game playing with the British parliament, but out of touch with colonial sentiment in his own backyard.

The Peopling of British North America and Voyagers to the West developed out of Bailyn's interest in the distance and suspicion that grew between American colonists and their British colonial rulers. In these books, he examines how the lives of those who came to America before the Revolution were forever bound with the new nation's fortunes. Meticulous acts of scholarship, both books are compelling history about the independence and self-sufficiency these voyagers were seeking.

Former president of the American Historical Association, Bailyn was elected in 1994 to the Russian Academy of Sciences, the first American historian to be elected to that body since George Bancroft in 1867. He is director of the International Seminar on the History of the Atlantic World. Bailyn did his undergraduate study at Williams College. He earned his master's and doctorate degrees from Harvard. Since 1953 he has been teaching colonial history and the American Revolution at Harvard, where he is Adams University Professor Emeritus. He was born in Hartford, Connecticut, in 1922. Lotte Bailyn, his wife, is T. Wilson Professor of Management at Sloan School of Management, at Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The Jefferson Lecture is the highest honor the federal government bestows for achievement in the humanities. It was established in 1972, and carries a $10,000 stipend.

National Humanities Medals

At The White House on November 5, 1998, President Clinton awarded the National Humanities Medal to nine distinguished Americans for their outstanding efforts to deepen public awareness and love of the humanities.

Stephen Ambrose has written about the great events and extraordinary people who have shaped this nation's history. A biographer of President Dwight D. Eisenhower, the chronicler of the expedition of Lewis and Clark, and most recently the storyteller of the American infantryman in World War II, Ambrose has awakened the historical curiosity of the American reading public. For thirty years he taught history at the University of New Orleans. Undaunted Courage, his book about the expedition of Lewis and Clark, caught the public's imagination over the lure of the West and was a best-seller. His recent book, Citizen Soldiers, is a hymn to the quiet strength and fortitude of these soldiers who, under the most dreadful conditions of modern warfare, brought about the destruction of the Nazi war machine. The book had a profound influence on producer Steven Spielberg and the making of Saving Private Ryan, for which Ambrose served as a consultant. His books remind us of the human qualities we aspire to: vision, courage, loyalty, and patriotism.

E. L. Doctorow, the author of The Book of Daniel, Ragtime, Loon Lake, World's Fair, Billy Bathgate, and The Waterworks, writes novels of uncommon perception and style about the American past and the American experience. His books begin where mythology and history converge. Informing much of Doctorow's work is his concept of history in the context of the novel. He uses history and imagination as the place to begin a work of literary art. A New Yorker, Doctorow was educated at Kenyon College and Columbia University. His early career as an editor at Dial Press brought him into contact with the leading American writers of the 1950s. He grew up in a family that venerated books and music. He is able to capture the way a time period feels, smells, and sounds. By conveying in his writing the way people moved and the way they spoke, Doctorow gives voice to our fellow Americans across vast distances of time and memory.

Diana Eck, a scholar of America's new religious diversity, believes that Americans must learn and care about each other's religions if our faiths are to endure. She is professor of comparative religions and Indian studies and creator and director of Harvard University's Pluralism Project, which documents the infusion of new faiths in the country and how those faiths and their new country are changing each other. The Pluralism Project has created an award-winning CD-ROM called On Common Ground: World Religions in America for use by teachers and students. Born in Montana, Eck is a member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and is the author of six books, including the highly acclaimed Encountering God: A Spiritual Journey from Bozeman to Banaras.

Nancye Brown Gaj believes in the fundamental and liberating force of being able to read. She founded Motheread in 1987 in an effort to help women inmates in North Carolina be able to read to and with their children. Teaching them to read helped these women reconnect with their children and themselves. While teaching adult literacy, Gaj found that most people wanted to earn a high school diploma, read the Bible, and read to their children. The program quickly grabbed hold and expanded out of the prisons and to entire families. In the past ten years, she and Motherhead volunteers have taught tens of thousands of women to read in thirteen states and the Virgin Islands. Today as Motherhead/Fatheread grows, Gaj believes being able to read helps us connect to our families and the communities in which we live. What began as a clinical experiment has ended up transforming the lives of those who have participated.

Henry Louis Gates, Jr., began a distinguished academic career in the trenches fighting for cultural pluralism. Gates, who now stands at the forefront of African American scholarship, questioned the curriculum in the literature department of Cambridge University twenty-five years ago. He has since then helped the canon grow to include writers such as Zora Neale Hurston and Richard Wright alongside Shakespeare and Plato. In 1991, Harvard University appointed him the W. E. B. DuBois Professor of the Humanities and director of the W. E. B. DuBois Institute for Afro-American Research. Gates was the first African American to receive a Ph.D. from Cambridge University. He has held professorships at Yale, Cornell, and Duke University. He was the recipient of a MacArthur Foundation "genius" award at age thirty-three, and in 1997, he was named one of the twenty-five most influential Americans by Time. His books include The Signifying Monkey: A Theory of Afro-American Literary Criticism, which won the American Book Award, Loose Canons: Notes on the Culture Wars, and his 1994 book, Colored People, about growing up in Piedmont, West Virginia.

Vartan Gregorian has built a career on saving famous institutions and promoting the world of ideas. The former president of Brown University and director of the New York Public Library, Gregorian is currently president of the Carnegie Corporation. He began his life in Tabriz, Iran, under the influence of a maternal grandmother who gave him a love of learning and ideas. In 1984, after serving in a variety of capacities at the University of Pennsylvania, he moved his sights to the then-failing New York Public Library. With NEH help, Gregorian began an aggressive campaign to rally the city's elite to save the venerable institution. After five years, Gregorian could look back on raising $270 million toward a $370 million fund-raising campaign. As president of Brown University, he brought the same zeal: revitalizing the university's academic departments, dramatically increasing its endowments, and adding more than two hundred new faculty members. Today, Gregorian is president of the Carnegie Corporation, which concentrates on funding social issues, child development, education, and world peace.

Ramon Eduardo Ruiz has always lived his life on the border, at one time or another calling Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and California home. A leading Hispanic scholar, he is the author of fifteen books. His 1968 book, Cuba: The Making of a Revolution, is considered the cornerstone work on that event. His controversial 1980 book on the Mexican Revolution, The Great Rebellion, was singularly important for interpreting the revolution as one of the last gasps of bourgeois protests in the nineteenth century. It challenges the notion that the Mexican Revolution freed an oppressed people from foreign domination, military dictatorships, and established popular rule and economic justice. His birthplace and experiences inspired him to write his latest book, On the Rim of Mexico, Where the Rich and Poor Rendezvous. The two thousand mile border that separates both nations, one rich, the other poor, has fascinated Ruiz for most of his life. Ruiz began his teaching career in 1955. In 1970, he joined the University of California, and in 1991, was named professor emeritus. Combining teaching with personal commitment, Ruiz has been a social justice advocate for many decades.

Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., has chronicled presidents and epochs. He has written elegantly about Puritans, the Constitution, and our common American future. He made a reputation with his book, The Age of Jackson, in 1945. In it, he challenged the received wisdom of Jacksonian democracy and wrote that Jackson's era saw the first attempt to establish federal supremacy over the states and broaden the authority of the national government in order to protect the individual from business. The best-selling book brought Schlesinger his first Pulitzer Prize and a Harvard professorship (despite the fact that he had not earned a Ph.D.). Schlesinger served as a presidential special advisor to John Fitzgerald Kennedy, an experience that led him to write his best-known book, A Thousand Days: John F. Kennedy in the White House, which brought him his second Pulitzer Prize. Schlesinger is equally well known as the historian of the New Deal. His three volumes on the presidency of Franklin D. Roosevelt are considered fundamental to the understanding of the early Roosevelt years. In his most recent book, The Disuniting of America, Schlesinger addresses the dire consequences of an America not rooted in its history. He offers hope in the promise of the Constitution—the glue that holds the fabric of the nation together with its promise of equal rights for all citizens.

Garry Wills's writings on history and culture illuminate our knowledge of the national landscape. In his countless articles, essays, and books, he has shared his knowledge on politics, history, religion, and theater. His book, Lincoln at Gettysburg, which won a Pulitzer Prize in 1993, examined a performance that literally changed the course of the nation's history. The famous address was not spontaneous but carefully worded and thought out. Lincoln's 272 words struck a nerve, while the two-hour speech by orator Edward Everett is lost forever. Through that address, "Lincoln changed the way we conceive of ourselves," says Wills. With equal intellectual curiosity, he has addressed diverse subjects such as Richard Nixon, Shakespeare, the Vietnam War, and John Wayne. Wills was schooled by Jesuits, first as a seminarian studying philosophy at St. Louis University and then at Xavier University. He later took a second M.A. and a Ph.D. in classics at Yale. He teaches at Northwestern University and writes for journals around the country as a scholar and critic. Today, nearly thirty years after he piqued the attention of the reading public with his provocative book, Nixon Agonistes, he is still an American original in thought and letters.

Division of Preservation and Access

The Division of Preservation and Access provides leadership and support to institutions and organizations attempting to address the problems posed by the physical deterioration of humanities collections in America's libraries, museums, archives, and historical organizations. At risk are the resources that constitute a significant portion of the nation's cultural legacy and that are crucial to all areas and disciplines of the humanities. The division also makes grants for the creation of major reference works-dictionaries, atlases, encyclopedias, and humanities databases-that preserve and portray the history and culture of the United States and the world. Also supported are efforts by institutions to ensure that there is appropriate intellectual access to collections that are important for research, education, and public programming in the humanities.

In fiscal year 1998, the division completed the tenth year of a multiyear program for the preservation of brittle books and serials. When the eight microfilming projects funded this year (involving thirty-seven institutions) and those that have been undertaken with NEH support at twenty-eight other libraries and library consortia are completed, the intellectual content of approximately 822,000 embrittled volumes will be preserved.

Newspapers chronicle the daily life of America's citizens in small towns and cities across the country. They document the civic, legal, historical, and cultural events that have occurred in every region of the nation during the past three hundred years. All fifty states, two U.S. territories, and the District of Columbia are now involved in the Endowment's United States Newspaper Program, a national initiative to catalog and preserve on microfilm the country's newspapers on a state-by-state basis. At the conclusion of currently funded NEH newspaper projects, more than 133,000 unique newspaper titles will be available in a national database and approximately fifty-eight million deteriorating newspaper pages will have been transferred onto microfilm.

Grants made in fiscal year 1998 also will preserve, provide intellectual access to, and stabilize a variety of museum, archival, and other unique collections that are important for the study of American literature, music, and history (including Native American and African American history and culture); children's literature; the history of botany; and Latin American, African, European, and Asian history and culture.

In fiscal year 1998, two grants were made for regional preservation field service programs that will provide surveys of preservation needs, workshops and seminars, technical consultations, and disaster assistance for hundreds of cultural institutions in the northeastern and southeastern states.

Among the research tools and reference works that received support in fiscal year 1998, are projects to create the Atlas of the Greek and Roman World at the University of North Carolina, the Comprehensive Aramaic Lexicon at Hebrew Union College, and the Pennsylvania Sumerian Dictionary at the University of Pennsylvania. These projects provide a foundation for research into past cultures. A grant to the Jacob Lawrence Project will support the compilation of a catalogue raisonné, of the African American painter, printmaker, and muralist. Other grants will make it possible to continue or complete work on a number of major reference works in the humanities: the Encyclopedia of New England Culture, the Atlas of Historical County Boundaries, the American Film Institute's Catalog of Feature Films, the History of Cartography, and the entry of ten thousand bibliographic records into the English Short Title Catalog database.

Division of Public Programs

Through the Division of Public Programs, the Endowment supports activities that engage Americans of all ages in the study, interpretation, and appreciation of important works, ideas, and events that make up the record of human civilization. The Endowment's programs for the public are based on the assumption that reflection upon the fundamental ideas and perennial questions addressed by the humanities remains important throughout a person's life, not just during the years of formal education. The Division of Public Programs accomplishes its mission through support of interpretive exhibitions, radio and television programs, reading and film discussion groups, symposia, conferences, interactive multimedia projects, and other types of humanities programs that reach communities throughout the country. The division particularly encourages projects that have regional or national significance or impact, reach new, expanded, and diverse audiences, use new technologies or multiple formats, and represent collaborations between cultural institutions and organizations.

Museum exhibitions funded in fiscal year 1998 will bring new insights into several aspects of American Indian life, including a permanent exhibition on the boarding school experience at the Heard Museum in Phoenix. Using oral histories and memorabilia gathered from former students at the government's boarding schools, the exhibition will speak with an insider's voice. It will also feature a simulated classroom and other components on dormitory life, curriculum, clubs, and sports, thus encouraging visitors to make connections to their own schooling. The division also provided funds for an exhibition, an interpretive garden, and related programs in schools, libraries, and community centers on life among the Creek and Cherokee tribes in Georgia before their expulsion from the state. Organized by the Atlanta Historical Society, a traveling version of the exhibition will go to Indian museums in North Carolina, Alabama, and Oklahoma.

Regional identity will be explored through projects funded in fiscal year 1998 and taking place in the nation's libraries. Regional literature and American identity will be the focus of "StoryLines America," which will offer talk show radio broadcasts and library programs on Southeastern and California literature. Featured authors will include Thomas Wolfe, Zora Neale Hurston, Pat Conroy, Wallace Stegner, and John Steinbeck. Regional and national themes related to issues of immigration and acculturation within a Latino context will be explored through another project entitled "Bridges That Unite Us/Puentes que nos unen." These bilingual reading and discussion programs will take place in 180 libraries in six Western states. Representing multiple perspectives and voices, the texts and study guides will engage participants in reflection upon issues that are of special importance to the West.

The public and private evolution of a complex American life, that of Eleanor Roosevelt, will be explored in a two-hour documentary film for public television. Eleanor Roosevelt, to be broadcast as part of The American Experience during the 1999-2000 season, reveals the life and times of an extraordinary person, who made significant contributions to her husband's political career and presidency, New Deal initiatives, human rights and world peace, and African American and women's rights. Drawing upon outstanding new scholarship, archival film and photographs, and first-hand testimonies, the film provides a fresh examination of an American legend. The division also provided funds for films on other American figures, such as noted photographers Edward Curtis and Gordon Parks. Public radio listeners will have the opportunity to learn about key issues facing Islam around the world through Living Islam, a series to be broadcast on such programs as All Things Considered and Morning Edition. Fiscal year 1998 marks the completion of the Endowment's Special Initiative for Humanities Radio Programming, which will result in a wide array of humanities segments being aired as part of programs listened to by American audiences.

Older Americans will explore themes important to the history, cultural traditions, and development of modern China and Russia through "The Peoples of Russia and China," supported by our Special Projects program. And young girls in six cities, primarily from low-income, minority families, will be engaged in "Girls Dig It: A Nationwide Archaeology Program for Girls, Ages 12-14." The project hopes eventually to reach 100,000 girls, helping them develop basic investigative and interpretive skills in hands-on archaeological projects with humanities scholars.

Special Projects

Grants support public programs in venues or formats that fall outside the other divisional categories. Special projects engage public audiences in learning about important topics in the humanities in a variety of settings and formats, including lectures, workshops, demonstrations, or other innovative presentations, and traveling exhibitions. Grants also support planning for the use of newer technologies, such as the Internet and CD-ROMs, to engage general audiences in the humanities.

Division of Research and Education

Programs of the Division of Research and Education are the nation's primary means of encouraging and supporting the advancement of American learning in the humanities. The division unites the Endowment's programs that encourage the creation and reclamation of knowledge and the subsequent transmission of that knowledge to teachers and students in universities, colleges, and schools nationwide. Four programs fulfill the mission of promoting significant scholarship of history, language, and culture: Education Development and Demonstration, Seminars and Institutes, Fellowships and Stipends, and Research.

The Education Development and Demonstration program supports nationally significant curriculum and materials development efforts; faculty study programs within and among educational institutions; and wider dissemination of the results of such projects. In 1998, the division entered the first year of the "Schools for a New Millennium" initiative to enable schools to further the teaching of the humanities through new digital technologies. NEH made one of these highly competitive awards to West Junior High School in Lawrence, Kansas. This one-year award will bring together junior high school teachers, museum curators, and university faculty members for intensive study and development of curricular materials for the improved teaching of local and state history. Upon implementation, students will join their teachers in researching historical topics by exploring new ways to digitize primary documents, photos, and artifacts.

Seminars and Institutes, the nation's leading faculty development program in the humanities, sponsors projects held each summer at colleges, universities, and research centers across the country. For example, the University of California, San Diego, hosted a 1998 Summer Seminar for School Teachers on the relationship between Japan and the West. By focusing on writings by Japanese traveling abroad and Westerners visiting Japan during the Meiji period (1868-1912), the seminar was deeply rooted in primary source materials while raising questions of contemporary, as well as historical, significance. The title of the seminar, "Foreigners Perceived," reflects the project's concern with stereotyping and with its implications for American-Japanese relations. The seminar involved teachers drawn from twelve states. Like the participants in all NEH seminars and institutes, they were selected in a national competition. Seminars and institutes are offered for college and university faculty members as well as for elementary and secondary school teachers.

Fellowships and Stipends enable individuals to enhance their capacities as teachers, researchers, and interpreters of the humanities. Awards provide released time for scholars to investigate and write on significant topics in all humanistic disciplines for up to one year. For example, Joseph Reidy, of Howard University in Washington, D.C., received a 1998-99 Fellowship for University Teachers to write a social history of African American sailors in the United States Navy during the Civil War. In his proposed book, Reidy will use naval records and personal accounts to weave together the lives and struggles of this rarely-studied group. Such an investigation will shed light on the contributions these sailors made to their communities and their country within the context of nineteenth-century naval and maritime history. The aim of these awards is to advance scholarly knowledge in particular disciplines or topic areas, and the resulting books are often acknowledged with prizes or other honors for bringing the humanities to a larger public as well.

Research grants support scholarly collaborations of all kinds, including scholarly editing, translations, conferences, and other kinds of basic research. One such project focuses on a large corpus of documents bearing on the Spanish entry into what is now New Mexico. While historians have long recognized the importance of these documents, there have been few accurate transcriptions or translations, and scholars, teachers, and students have had to work without the benefit of a useful edition. Two established scholars, who bring complementary skills to bear on questions of language and methodology, are being assisted by two junior scholars in the preparation of an edition of important Spanish documents with facing English translations and a critical apparatus. This edition, which includes sources from the first recorded exploration in 1536 to the 1680 Pueblo Revolt, will make the primary sources accessible to specialists and nonspecialists alike. Research grants also provide U.S. scholars with residential fellowships at independent domestic and foreign centers for advanced study.

James Herbert Director Division of Research and Education

Grants provide up to three years of support for research in the preparation for publication of editions, translations, and other important works in the humanities, and in the conduct of large or complex interpretive studies, including archaeology projects and the humanities studies of science and technology.

Federal-State Partnership

The NEH Federal-State Partnership is a collaborative endeavor of the National Endowment for the Humanities and the fifty-six state humanities councils to ensure that all of the nation's citizens-wherever they live-will benefit from substantive humanities programs that are locally designed with the concerns and needs of each state's citizens in mind. State humanities councils are volunteer organizations that operate in all fifty states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands, the Northern Marianas, American Samoa, and Guam. The primary purpose of the councils, and a basic aim of the Endowment itself, is to foster public understanding and appreciation of the humanities. Through the partnership, NEH funds are given annually to the state councils, which then support, on a competitive basis, locally initiated humanities programs for the people in each state and territory. State councils also design and conduct specific humanities initiatives themselves to ensure that excellent humanities programs reach citizens in all regions of each state and territory. Projects supported and conducted by state councils include, among others, institutes for elementary and secondary school teachers, public lectures, Chautauqua presentations, reading and discussion programs, family literacy initiatives, film and video projects, and traveling exhibitions.

Last year, councils reached cumulative audiences of more than 145 million, including 471,000 in discussion programs, 3.3 million through exhibitions, 475,000 in K-12 programs, 26,400 in family reading and literacy programs, 152,000 in Chautauqua programs, and 132 million through various broadcast media. Programs supported by the fifty-six state humanities councils enable the NEH to extend its reach into every state and to all U.S. territories. In the past year, the state councils have enabled almost seventeen thousand scholars to join in vigorous and fruitful exchange with a broad range of public audiences, demonstrating that the humanities are an integral part of the daily lives of Americans everywhere.

The state councils continue to address major issues in elementary and secondary education. They help to create networks linking institutions of higher learning, secondary schools, state departments of education, and cultural institutions, such as museums and libraries. They have brought together college and university professors, teachers, parents, and students in substantive programs that help to strengthen instruction in the schools. Several states support teacher institutes. With funding from the Idaho Humanities Council, forty teachers of Idaho history gathered for a two-week institute titled "Idaho and the American West" at Northwest Nazarene College in Nampa. More than a dozen scholars led classes and workshops on topics in Idaho's history, including its prehistory, Native American culture, agriculture and mining, and contemporary politics and economics. The Texas Council for the Humanities collaborates with colleges and universities throughout Texas to sponsor weeklong workshops for teachers, featuring electronic humanities resources related to the curriculum needs of classroom teachers in the state. Workshops in the summer of 1998 focused on the theme of Texas history and cultures.

Commissioned by the California Council for the Humanities, and based on the "Gold Fever!" exhibition developed with NEH support by the Oakland Museum of California, two traveling exhibitions will visit more than a dozen communities during the three years of the "Rediscovering California at 150" sesquicentennial project. In addition, the California Council produced "History Alive," which features dramatic, historically accurate portrayals of figures from the California Gold Rush. Between February 1998 and the end of the year 2000, the California Council will schedule appearances by these performers in more than one hundred communities throughout California.

The Tennessee Humanities Council and its Tennessee Center for the Book presented the tenth annual Southern Festival of Books: A Celebration of the Written Word at War Memorial Plaza in Nashville, attracting more than thirty thousand people. Events included panel discussions, author readings and discussion sessions, and a children's stage for activities for children and families. Nine other state councils also sponsor book festivals.

State humanities councils continue to strengthen their organizational resources, obtaining more than $6.7 million last year from state legislatures, as they pursue their goal of engaging all Americans in study, reflection, and discussion of the humanities.

Office of Challenge Grants

Museums, colleges and universities, libraries, research centers, public broadcasting stations—all kinds of humanities institutions face many challenges as the new century approaches. All are absorbing the impact of the technological revolution and harnessing its power for study, research, and public programming. While many seek to extend our knowledge of diverse cultures at home and around the globe, they are at the same time looking for new forms of collaboration and new audiences. All are concerned about long-term financial strength and about preservation of humanities resources and programs. By encouraging donations for endowment and other capital improvements, NEH Challenge Grants help cultural and academic institutions address pressing long-term needs and fulfill exciting aspirations for permanent improvements in the humanities. And, through these grants, NEH extends a financial challenge to the nonfederal sector to join in providing long-term support for the humanities.

For example, Broward County Public Library in Florida received $600,000 in this fiscal year matched by $1.8 million in nonfederal donations toward construction of an African American Research Library and Cultural Center, acquisition of humanities collections, and endowment for future programming in the new facility. Responding to the complexity of a diverse community with a large immigrant population from the Caribbean, South America, and Africa, the new center will house more than seventy-five thousand books, documents, and electronic materials. As part of its planning to enhance and extend its program in Cherokee studies, Western Carolina University in North Carolina received $50,000 in 1998, the first installment of a Challenge Grant that will create an endowment fund supporting a professorship, library acquisitions, as well as academic and public programming. The Albright Institute of Archaeological Research, an American research center in Jerusalem, used its 1998 Challenge Grant installment of $175,000 to upgrade its online library technology and to begin an endowment fund for staffing. The Kona Historical Society is using its Challenge Grant, beginning with $100,000 in 1998, to acquire, preserve, and restore a 1920s coffee farm built by immigrant Japanese, allowing for future interpretation of family, work, and changing cultural traditions in the remote Kona district of Hawai'i.

To strengthen humanities programs in public libraries, the Challenge Grants Program instituted a Special Initiative for Public Libraries in fiscal years 1998 and 1999. With Challenge Grants of up to $150,000, matched by twice the amount in nonfederal donations, libraries are encouraged to establish targeted endowments to support humanities programming. For example, the Athens-Clarke County Library, serving a five-county urban, suburban, and rural region in Georgia, will use its Special Initiative grant to endow an expanded roster of humanities programs and to strengthen related collections.

As these examples indicate, Challenge Grants can be used in a variety of ways. The most common is the growth or establishment of endowment funds. Other uses are possible where the need is compelling and clearly related to improvements in the humanities. Often combined with endowment funds, direct expenditures can address such needs as acquisitions, construction and renovation, and technological enhancement. Because the purpose of a Challenge Grant is to strengthen the humanities over the long run, awards are made in light of careful institutional strategic planning for the grant and for the institutional humanities goals that the grant funds (both federal and nonfederal) are intended to support. No matter what the type of humanities activity being strengthened, all NEH Challenge Grants encourage potential donors to step forward and support humanities institutions crucial to the educational and cultural life of their communities.

Office of Enterprise

The Office of Enterprise strengthens the Endowment's leadership role in the humanities by increasing the reach of Endowment programs and promoting opportunities for the humanities to make an impact on new audiences across the country.

EDSITEment, a joint project launched in 1997 by NEH, the Council of the Great City Schools (CGCS), and MCI (now MCI WorldCom), to bring together online humanities resources, continued to grow in 1998. In July, the number of sites linked to EDSITEment more than doubled with the addition of twenty-nine new sites. Users of EDSITEment now have access to forty-nine high-quality humanities sites, representing more than 50,000 files searchable through the EDSITEment search engine. In October, just one year after its launch, EDSITEment logged its 200,000th user session. As the year drew to a close, MCI WorldCom renewed its commitment to EDSITEment through a second $500,000 grant, which will support EDSITEment activities through March 2001.

A partnership with the Pioneer Place shopping center in Portland, Oregon, provided the Endowment its first opportunity to hold humanities programming in commercial public space. With the Rouse Company, which owns the property, the Oregon Council for the Humanities and the Oregon Historical Society are partners in what promises to become an annual humanities event. The program, "Life and Times of a Nation," included the Endowment's "Hail to the Chief: Presidents, Politics, and Power" exhibition, continuous-loop tapes of NEH-funded documentaries, and Chautauqua performances of Thomas Jefferson and Meriwether Lewis by Clay Jenkinson and of George Washington by Greg Monahan. With no additional funding, the Endowment helped to leverage $75,000 from partners and the media. It reached an in-house audience of more than 1,600 school children and adults, and a statewide audience through newspaper articles and television coverage. Because of its effectiveness, Oregon Public Broadcasting and the Portland CitySearch website have joined the partnership for the 1999 program.

The Enterprise Office negotiated a five-year renewable international partnership with the German Historical Institute and the American Institute for Contemporary German Studies. This partnership will increase the value of NEH Fellowships by extending the scholarly opportunities for Fellows in the field of postwar German studies, providing them the opportunity to work collaboratively with German scholars. The NEH Fellows are selected through the established NEH peer review process. With no investment of funds beyond Fellowships already awarded, this partnership already has leveraged $272,000 granted to the GHI and AICGS by the German American Academic Council to support this collaborative German American scholarly project. Each year's research program will be based upon the topics of NEH Fellows. GHI/AICGS will carry out an annual competition to select the German scholars to collaborate in the research program, and will hold symposia and offer potential publication.

NEH outreach to the nation's capital and its annual twenty-two million visitors from around the nation and the world includes not only humanities exhibitions in the Old Post Office Pavilion, its home building, but also participation in city-wide economic development and revitalization planning. Along with cultural, business, and government leaders, the NEH is one of three federal agencies with membership in the newly formed Downtown Arts Committee and one of only two with permanent liaison membership in the board of the newly incorporated Cultural Development Corporation.

The Enterprise Office has supported outreach and promotion funding for the NEH-funded film series Africans in America. Through the Enterprise Office, NEH continued its participation in the consortium, Partners in Tourism. In 1998, Partners in Tourism helped design the Travel Industry Association's annual survey about trends in travel and tourism. As a result, cultural institutions can make a strong, quantifiable case for their significance to the nation's travel and tourism industry. Of the nearly two hundred million U.S. adult travelers over the year, 46 percent, or 92.4 million, included a cultural, arts, heritage, or historic activity while on a trip of fifty miles or more. Of these, 31 percent (62.6 million) visited a historical site and 24 percent (58.7 million) visited a museum. Those surveyed indicated that they often spend more time, and thereby more money, on their trips in order to include cultural activities and events.

The Enterprise Office represents the Endowment on the White House Millennium Council and has supported an upcoming film called Crucible of the Millennium.

NEH Summer Fellows Program

The purpose of the NEH Summer Fellows Program is to acquaint promising college students in the humanities with the policies, programs, and operations of the National Endowment for the Humanities. Under the guidance of the agency's professional staff, fellows participated in the work of the Endowment for eleven weeks during the summer of 1998. Each fellow was assigned to one program division or office of the agency to assist in daily work and to undertake a special project. Summer Fellows also had opportunities to learn about the work of similar federal agencies and cultural institutions. Nearly 150 undergraduate humanities majors and graduate students in the humanities applied for nine fellowships. Each of the nine fellows received a $4,000 grant.
