

EXPLORING THE HUMAN ENDEAVOR

NATIONAL ENDOWMENT
FOR THE HUMANITIES
ANNUAL REPORT
2011

CHAIRMAN'S LETTER

July 2012

Dear Mr. President,

It is my privilege to present the 2011 Annual Report of the National Endowment for the Humanities.

The late Steve Jobs, founder of Apple, described the difference between the company that he made into the most valuable in the world and other computer builders by the use of a few words: the liberal arts and the humanities. "Technology alone is not enough," Jobs said. "It's technology married with liberal arts, married with the humanities, that yields us the results that make our hearts sing." As our nation focuses on the need to excel in science, technology, engineering and math, it is particularly important not to lose sight of the purpose of success in these fields—the purpose enumerated as an unalienable right in the Declaration of Independence, the right to the "pursuit of happiness." The mission of NEH is to give full value to the great branches of scholarly and cultural activity in order to achieve a greater understanding of the past, a wiser analysis of the present, and a more prescient view of the future.

For forty-six years, NEH has striven to provide value to the American people by supporting important humanities research and bringing a wide variety of humanities programming to every corner of our nation. We do this by supporting ideas from the grass roots, from scholars and researchers, museum directors and filmmakers, and allowing each individual state humanities council to design humanities programs to fit local interests. Through a rigorous peer review process we reward cutting-edge scholarship and the finest in public programming.

Often, research takes years of devoted work to come to fruition. The Dictionary of American Regional English, for instances, brought forth its fifth and final volume this year, providing a vivid and fascinating picture of the varieties of word use across the country. Sometimes, the humanities can be lightning fast, at least in their application, such as a 3D, high-definition holographic exhibit of an Egyptian mummy unwrapping at the Milwaukee Public Museum or a tabletop device for museums to allow for interactive browsing of large-scale digital collections.

When technology and the humanities marry the results can be astounding. For almost two decades, NEH has been a major contributor to the Perseus Project of Tufts University, which started as a gateway for those interested in the literature, art, and archaeology of Ancient Greece and has grown to include materials pertaining to Ancient Rome, Early Modern Europe, literature of the Enlightenment, the nineteenth century, and the American Civil War. Free online cultural repositories such as the Perseus Project democratize access to information.

The democratization of knowledge starts in our schools with great teaching. NEH's summer programs for teachers go beyond pedagogy, providing an opportunity to study and learn humanities subjects among their peers with esteemed scholars and outstanding resources. The subject matter of seminars and workshops this year range from World War I in the Middle East to the works of John Steinbeck to the outbreak of the American Revolution, studied onsite in Lexington and Concord, Massachusetts.

Planning for the longevity of our humanities institutions, large and small, ensures that resources remain accessible for future generations. For instance, at Cape Cod Community College renovations to the library are being made to house and safeguard the W. B. Nickerson Cape Cod History Archives, the only archival resource dedicated to preserving the Cape's historical record in its entirety. And an endowment at the National Underground Railroad Freedom Center in Cincinnati looks to provide decades of traditional education and distance-learning programs.

NEH grants support research, programs, and exhibits that expand our collective memory and advance our understanding of critical pieces of history. 2011 was the fiftieth anniversary of the Freedom Rides, when four hundred courageous citizens, largely young, determined to stand up against segregation in the Deep South by integrating interstate buses, trains, and facilities. Their stories were told in an NEH-funded documentary shown on public television—Freedom Riders—along with a slew of programming that included traveling exhibitions, audiences with original riders, a robust, interactive website with curriculum and archival materials, and a reenactment of the original Freedom Ride for a group of today's students, who rode buses and blogged their experiences along the way. The film won three Emmys from the Academy of Television Arts and Sciences.

One hundred and fifty years ago the Civil War began the bloodiest chapter in our nation's history. Its scars still remain on the American imagination. In a national reading and discussion program at libraries around the country, audiences explore the causes and outcomes of the conflict. Sixty-five libraries were awarded grants to conduct the series "Let's Talk About It: Making Sense of the American Civil War" using a new NEH/ALA anthology along with works by Geraldine Brooks and James McPherson. 2011 was another anniversary, even closer in the minds of most Americans—ten years after 9/11. The September 11 Digital Archive, funded by NEH and created by George Mason University and City University of New York Graduate Center, contains more than 150,000 items, including first-hand accounts, emails, digital photographs, videos, and artworks created in response to 9/11. It promises to be a collective witness to the tragedy, a place where people can learn, read each other's stories, and add their own to our national memory.

Sincerely,

James A. Leach
Chairman, National Endowment for the Humanities

THE NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES

In order “to promote progress and scholarship in the humanities and the arts in the United States,” Congress enacted the National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities Act of 1965. This act established the National Endowment for the Humanities as an independent grant-making agency of the federal government to support research, education, and public programs in the humanities. In fiscal year 2009, grants were made through the Federal/State Partnership, four divisions (Education Programs, Preservation and Access Programs, Public Programs, and Research Programs), the Office of Challenge Grants, and the Office of Digital Humanities.

The act that established the National Endowment for the Humanities says, “The term ‘humanities’ includes, but is not limited to, the study and interpretation of the following: language, both modern and classical; linguistics; literature; history; jurisprudence; philosophy; archaeology; comparative religion; ethics; the history, criticism, and theory of the arts; those aspects of social sciences which have humanistic content and employ humanistic methods; and the study and application of the humanities to the human environment with particular attention to reflecting our diverse heritage, traditions, and history and to the relevance of the humanities to the current conditions of national life.”

The National Endowment for the Humanities supports exemplary work to advance and disseminate knowledge in all the disciplines of the humanities. Endowment support is intended to complement and assist private and local efforts and to serve as a catalyst to increase nonfederal support for projects of high quality. To date, NEH matching grants have helped generate almost approximately $2.4 billion in gift funds. Each application to the Endowment is assessed by knowledgeable persons outside the agency who are asked for their judgments about the quality and significance of the proposed project. More than 1,000 scholars, professionals in the humanities, and other experts served on 216 panels throughout the year.

The following lists of grants include all funds that were released in 2011, including funds that were amendments to earlier grants. For example, a summer institute awarded $170,000 in 2010 may have received an additional $10,000 in 2011 for follow-up activities. Additionally, many NEH grants receive matching funds, which are only released when the private gift donations are secured, perhaps over the course of several years. These matching funds awarded in 2011 are indicated by a single asterisk (*) throughout. A double asterisk () denotes a Chairman’s grant, which is a fast-track grant awarded up to $30,000 at the discretion of the chairman of NEH. For more complete information on any project, please use the grant search tool on the NEH website, www.neh.gov.

JEFFERSON LECTURE

On May 2, 2011, Civil War historian and Harvard President Drew Gilpin Faust presented the fortieth annual Jefferson Lecture in the Humanities at the The Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington, DC. Her subject, “Telling War Stories: Reflections of a Civil War Historian,” examined how America remembered the Civil War at its centennial and at its sesquicentennial. Yet the fact that we mark it each time with excitement is part of a long tradition in human history.

“Some might see the connection of war with human creativity as the inevitable outcome of the prevalence of war in human experience,” said Faust. “If one considers any period of one hundred years in the last five thousand, an average of ninety-four of those years would have witnessed a large-scale conflict in some area of the world. Our stories and histories are so full of war, we might conclude, because our history is so full of war. But if we think of our own Civil War example, its four-year duration—less than 2 percent of our national history—is certainly disproportionate to the volume of both literary and historical writing it has generated. We don’t just write about wars because, like Mount Everest, they are there. Human beings are in fact powerfully attracted to war.”

Faust’s own attraction to the subject began in childhood, growing up in Boyce, Virginia, where roads were marked by Confederate-gray signs for the many Civil War historic sites nearby. In the early sixties, she traveled with her family to watch centennial celebrations and reenactments of the Civil War, at the same time as she was moved by the the burgeoning Civil Rights Movement. As a nine-year-old in Virginia, she wrote to President Eisenhower about the controversial desegregation in her state’s schools: “Please Mr. Eisenhower, please try and have schools and other things accept colored people.”

Faust went to prep school in the north, and then college at Bryn Mawr and graduate school at the University of Pennsylvania. There, her interests turned again to her Southern roots and the Civil War. Her dissertation on antebellum Southern intellectuals turned into her first book, A Sacred Circle. In Mothers of Invention: Women of the Slaveholding South in the American Civil War, Faust used diaries and letters to delve into the complex life of women on the home front and their role in ending the war. Her latest book, This Republic of Suffering (winner of the Bancroft Prize), examines how the incomprehensible death toll of the Civil War transformed the nation.

Faust has been the president of Harvard University since 2007—the university’s twenty-eighth president and the first woman to hold the post.

NATIONAL HUMANITIES MEDAL

President Barack Obama awarded the 2011 National Humanities Medals during a ceremony held at the White House in February 2012. Eight individuals and one organization were honored for their exemplary contributions to the humanities.

The National Humanities Medal, first awarded in 1989 as the Charles Frankel Prize, honors individuals or groups whose work has deepened the nation's understanding of the humanities, broadened our citizens' engagement with the humanities, or helped preserve and expand Americans' access to important resources in the humanities.

Medal recipients do not compete for this award but are selected by the president for their lifelong achievements in their diverse areas of expertise. Their achievements were cited at the White House ceremony.

KWAME ANTHONY APPIAH

Philosopher, for seeking eternal truths in the contemporary world. His books and essays within and beyond his academic discipline have shed moral and intellectual light on the individual in an era of globalization and evolving group identities.

JOHN ASHBERRY

Poet, for his contributions to American letters. Since his first book was published in 1953, he has been awarded nearly every prize available for poetry, including a Pulitzer Prize and the Grand Prix de Biennales Internationales de Poésie. One of the New York School poets, he has changed how we read poetry and has influenced generations of poets.

ROBERT DARNTON

Historian and librarian, for his determination to make knowledge accessible to everyone. As an author he has illuminated the world of Enlightenment and Revolutionary France, and as a librarian he has endeavored to make his vision for a comprehensive national library of digitized books a reality.

NATIONAL HISTORY DAY

A program that inspires a passion for history in American students. Each year more than half a million children from across the country compete in this event, conducting research and producing websites, papers, performances, and documentaries to tell the human story.

ANDREW DELBANCO

Literary scholar, for his insight into the American character, past and present. He has been called "America's best social critic" for his essays on current issues and higher education. As a professor in American studies, he reveals how classics by Melville and Emerson have shaped our history and contemporary life.

CHARLES ROSEN

Musician and scholar, for his rare ability to join artistry to the history of culture and ideas. His writings—about Classical composers and the Romantic tradition—highlight how music evolves and remains a vibrant, living art.

TEOFILO RUIZ

Medieval historian, for his inspired teaching and writing. His erudite studies have deepened our understanding of medieval Spain and Europe, while his late examination of how society has coped with terror has taught important lessons about the dark side of western progress.

RAMÓN SALDÍVAR

Literary scholar, for his bold explorations of identity along the border separating the United States and Mexico. Through his studies of Chicano literature and the development of the novel in Europe and America, he beckons us to notice the cultural and literary markings that unite and divide us.

AMARTYA SEN

Economist and Nobel laureate, for his insights into the causes of poverty, famine, and injustice. By applying philosophical thinking to questions of policy, he has changed how standards of living are measured and increased our understanding of how to fight hunger.

Through the Division of Education Programs, NEH provides national support for faculty development and teaching resources in the humanities. These resources are developed with rigorous scholarship to meet the needs of America's classrooms. The division's programs address needs at all grade levels, from elementary through graduate school, and help instructors bring humanities scholarship into their teaching.

Through the Office of Digital Humanities, NEH supports efforts in the area of digital scholarship. Digital technology has changed the way scholars perform their work, allowing new questions to be raised and changing the ways material can be searched, mined, displayed, taught, and analyzed. The office also facilitates conversations with other funding bodies both in the United States and abroad to work towards meeting these challenges.

FOOTNOTES

¹ New grants, supplemental awards on previous years' grants, transfers to other agencies, and program contracts.

² Totals include obligations for new grants, supplemental grants, program contracts, and other program-related purposes. Included are awards that are
 (a) made by NEH using appropriated funds, including funds appropriated to the We the People program,
 (b) made by NEH using program funds transferred to the Endowment by other federal agencies, and
 (c) made by NEH using funds contributed by nonfederal entities.

³ Totals include definite program funds used to match gifts.

Note: Detail may not add to totals due to rounding.
